CALL FOR PAPERS

Ecological Political Thought: History and Genealogical Paths

Since the early 1960s, environmental issues have become increasingly prominent in the theoretical-political debate, leading to an innovative integration with some of the major existing political doctrines and philosophies. Eco-socialism, eco-Marxism, eco-pacifism, eco-feminism, libertarian ecologism, green liberalism, and Catholic integral ecology are only some of the articulations of the new ecological political thought over the decades, indicating the relevance held by environmental issues in various political cultures.

The call for papers for issue No. 19 (1/2023) aims to collect two different types of contributions: on one hand, it is intended to solicit the identification of genealogical paths capable of capturing the moment of conceptual redefinition of the human-environment relationship, from the Industrial Revolution onward, and its repercussions on political theory; on the other hand, it is intended to solicit the submission of contributions aimed at tracing a history of ecological political thought, as it has been articulated from the 1960s to the present day.

To submit a proposal, send an email to cfp@rivistapolitics.eu with an attached file containing: title; name of the author; abstract (maximum 250 words); essential bibliography (maximum 5 references). All proposals will be evaluated by the scientific committee and only then will the submission of the full article be requested.

The deadlines are as follows:

- 1/4/2023: submission of proposals;
- 16/4: proposal selection;
- 18/6: article submission (max 35000 spaces, excluding abstract, notes and bibliography);
- 27/8: communication of double-blind review outcomes;
- 10/9: submission of revised articles;
- 9/18/23: publication.

Please note that:

- the Journal citation method is: The Chicago Manual of Style 17th \(Author-date\);
- all articles will be evaluated using the double-blind peer review method;
- articles must be written using ONLY the template file ("journal template file") downloadable from the following link: <https://rivistapolitics.wordpress.com/about/info/> (articles not using this file will not be evaluated).
